About Arts Horizons

More than 45 years ago, a New Jersey father had a concern for his young daughters - the lack of music in their school. Being a musician himself, he knew the importance of music and the arts as a whole. His concern turned into action. This father, who happened to be a member of the pit orchestra for A Chorus Line on Broadway, asked some of his musician friends to join him for a performance at his daughters' school. After seeing the joy and enthusiasm on the children's faces, he knew he'd struck a chord.

After that day, on their days off, he and his musician friends started performing in other schools throughout New Jersey and New York. Noticing how receptive and engaged the children and teachers were during these performances, and how popular they became, the father added other performance groups. He and his musician friends formed Festival Brass, a lively, interactive music assembly program that taught students about the brass family of instruments.

One father's concern became an idea, and Arts Horizons was born. That father, John Devol, has seen his idea become one of the largest arts-in-education, not-for-profit organizations in the New York and New Jersey area, serving more than 250,000 children, teachers, families, and seniors annually in dance, theater, visual arts, music, new media, and more.

HIGHLIGHTS OF ACHIEVEMENTS:

- Citation of Excellence for NJ State Council of the Arts
- Recipient of an Arts Education Award from the Theatre Museum of New York
- Provided healing programs to children affected by 9/11 through School Arts Rescue Initiative
- Collaborated with the St. Barnabas Healthcare System, to provide arts intervention programs to children of families with substance abuse.
- Contracted by the Kennedy Center for Performing Arts to present programs for students with disabilities
- Selected to partner with Global Kids for a National Park Service program to educate students about the Japanese American Exclusion and Incarceration Story through the arts
